

Thank you!

Dr. Chapple,

I wanted to say thanks for taking the time to educate our employees on the proper techniques of lifting, pulling, pushing, twisting, etc.

Work comp and injury related expenses need to be kept in check in any manufacturing environment.

I usually put on these safety presentations to our employees and always wondered if they were getting anything out of the presentation.

When I saw how attentive and enthusiastic they were during your presentation and how well armed you were with facts, figures, examples and hands on training, I know that this time I went the correct route.

Many of them appreciated the examples you gave of home related activities as well. The example you gave of lifting/playing with their grandchildren is something we rarely even think about.

As we all know a lot of these injuries do happen at home and an injury that happens at home does linger into the workplace. The pain and discomfort from an injury that happened at home definitely reduces their productivity here as well.

Doc, thanks again. This was well worth the time we invested.

Thanks,
Dan Radochonski
